VIUSID®

It demonstrates a substantial increase in IFN-gamma (antiviral effect) and IL-10 (anti-inflammatory cytokine), while decreasing IL-1 and factor necrosia tumoral alfa IL-6 (pro-inflammatory cytokines).

Inactivates extracellular free virus particles

Prevents uncapsulation of intracellular infectious particles

Deteriorates the assembly capacity of the virus's structural components

In the early stages of infection, it decreases viral replication by preventing viral capsid shedding

Inhibits the infectious capacity of the virus

It acts on the kinases responsible for the phosphorylation of cell membrane peptides, which are the viral receptor sites, preventing them from binding to the cell membrane

Enhances phagocytic properties against microorganisms

Stimulates production of interleukin-12 in macrophages and induces production of interferons that promote their activation
